1) A school in the United States created a program to help turtles. The turtles are raised from eggs. These are rescued from turtles hit by cars. The rescue program sends up to 200 orphaned turtles into the wild each year.

2) When a type of animal is at risk of extinction, it can be added to the endangered-species list. All governments must work to save these animals. A species is taken off the list when it is no longer at risk of extinction.

3) Rome is an ancient city in Italy. For a long time, it was the center of a great empire. The city's power can be seen in monuments that are still standing. One of the grandest is the Colosseum, which was built about two thousand years ago.

4) Last year, a 9-year-old boy set up a lemonade stand. Customers stopped by. This boy did not know it at the time, but he had broken a national law. In most places, kids need a permit or license to run a lemonade stand.
